VI. Old Business

Jewish Student Union (JSU) Appeal of Base Budget Allocation

Palma/Saracho said that had agreed to hear JSU’s appeal of the Base Budget allocation. He said that it is not USAC’s purpose to speak to the quality or content of the proposal. He said that they can only focus on the Base Budget process. He said that JSU will have ten minutes to make their case. He said that the Budget Review Committee will then also be given ten minutes to make a presentation. He said that the floor will then be opened to Council for questions to either JSU or the BRC.

Gideon Baum introduced himself as the president of the JSU. He said that he would first like to apologize to the Budget Review Committee for what must seem to be an affront. He said that the crux of the JSU’s argument were centered on Priorities 2 and 3. He said that they feel that the BRC’s requirement for retention in Priority 2 is too narrowly defined. He said that many people viewed the AMC Bowling Night, included in the JSU proposal, as a social event. He said that the purpose of that bowling night is to target the more observant Jewish students at UCLA. He said that many Jewish students feel left out of many of the activities that are provided for the other students. He said that bowling is very popular in the Jewish community and that it allows for the breakdown of gender separation that prevails in the more conservative segment of the community. He said that it allows the more observant Jewish students to feel a sense of community. He said that in essence this program helps keep students at UCLA. He said that the JSU’s appeal is also based on priority 3. He said that he believes that this priority places a premium on community service projects that occur off-campus. He said that the main Jewish groups on campus are Hillel, PJSA, BFI and JSU. He said that since Hillel, PJSA, and BFI do quite a bit of off-campus community service, JSU felt that it would be better serving the community to focus on on-campus work. He said that they hope to perform community service by strengthening the on-campus community.

Bukirin said that she would like to thank JSU for following due process. She said that she would like to emphasize that the BRC has faith in the process. She said that she would like to remind Council that they approved the guidelines, which the BRC used, three weeks before group proposals were turned in.

- Lam said that there are three grounds for appeal stated in Article V.C.6.b. of the Constitution, as follows: “(1) Alleged lack of a reasonable opportunity to appear before the funding committee or body. (2) A procedural error or discrepancy that caused a proposal to be substantially disadvantaged before the funding committee or body. (3) Alleged unfair treatment or inconsistent treatment by the funding committee or body”.

- Lam said that the application was made available to all of the groups that applied. She said that the BRC used every method available to them to get the application to the groups. She said that the priorities are not new. She said that they were used last year.

- Chen said that JSU stated that the priorities were poorly defined. She said that these priorities were adopted from the priorities used during the previous year. She said that she would argue that the BRC’s priorities are not poorly defined but that JSU’s interpretation of them was too narrow. She said that their application and their interview did not adequately demonstrate how JSU meets the priorities set forth.

- Schreiber said that the BRC’s final point is that the remedy requested is unfair. He said that the JSU was given a fair allocation based on their proposal and interview.

- Palma/Saracho said that Council is now free to ask questions of either group.

- Wynn asked if anything that JSU stated before Council was not stated before the BRC.

- Baum said that he felt that the information was provided to the BRC, but that his description to Council was more explicit.

- Kozak asked why JSU had not asked the BRC questions about the priorities before they turned in their application.

- Baum said that at that time much of their leadership was in a state of flux. He said there were major communication issues. He said that he feels, nonetheless, that the priorities that the BRC used to judge groups were flawed.

- McKesey asked why JSU’s leadership turnover affected them so badly when other groups had the same problem.

- Baum said that they had a president leave early, which caused a double turnover. He said that it really affected the JSU.

- Lawson asked how many students JSU reaches.

- Baum said that that number differs from event to event. He said that they reach anywhere from 1,000 to 1,500 people directly through email as well as another 500 through Hillel. He said that those students are not just Jewish.

- Husse-Jerome asked why the BRC believes that JSU’s definition of retention is too narrowly defined.

- Chen said that the BRC gave the priorities to the groups so that they could apply them to themselves.

- Bukirin said that the BRC didn’t just look at a group’s programs. She said that it was up to a group to adequately define how they fulfilled the priorities.

- Wynn said that she thought that questions were supposed to apply to the BRC’s process.

- McKesey said that any further questions should be based on the process.

- Tuttle said that JSU had mentioned that there were things that they said implicitly that they should have said explicitly. He asked if there were any difference in the way that this group was dealt with compared with other groups. He asked if there was any discussion between the BRC and other groups that would draw those implicit things out and make them explicit that wasn’t provided to this group.

- Bukirin said that every group was asked how they addressed the priorities given. She said that no groups were asked questions that other groups were not.

- Lam said that the interviews were just a second opportunity for organizations to make clear to the BRC how they fulfilled the priorities.

- Tuttle asked if this same process was followed with JSU.

- Chen said that it was.

- Lawson asked JSU if they believed that Priorities 2 and 3 disadvantaged their group.
Baum said that they believed that Priorities 2 and 3 had disadvantaged their group.

Nguyen moved and Lam seconded to approve the Jewish Student Union’s Appeal of their Base Budget allocation.

McKesey asked if there was any discussion.

Lawson said that he would like to remind Council that JSU is a former Student Advocacy Group (SAG). He said that at one time USAC felt that any program that a SAG put on was helping the UCLA community. He said that it is a mistake to believe that every campus groups should have a budget tailor-made to these priorities.

McKesey asked if there was any discussion. There being none, Council voted to reject the motion with 2 votes in favor, 7 against and 1 abstention.

-McKesey said that they would handle that item next.

Resolution in Support of Same-Sex Marriage
-A member of the Queer Alliance thanked USAC for their time. He said that they feel that civil recognition of same-sex marriages does not bind religious groups to recognize those marriages. He said that legalizing them would not force religious groups to perform the marriages.

-McKesey asked if there was any discussion.
-Husse said that in the future she would like to know about these kinds of resolutions before they are included in the Agenda so that she can do more to support them then just vote on them.
